A blind man's goal

People have their dreams and goals in life. We are all created by God for a purpose in our lives. Even disabled people have dreams and goals of their own. For example, blind people, we should not underestimate them because they are blind. They might not see the beauty of nature that God created, but they are blessed to have a very active and a smart mind. They are so aware of what is going on around them. Even in money matters, you cannot fool them, as their senses are so strong. Blind people can be good singers and composers too. For example, Stevie Wonder, he is blind but he became famous for being a good singer and composer.

God gives us gifts and talents. Blind people are so eager to achieve their own goals in life. Some can play musical instruments even though they cannot see anything. Stevie Wonder can play the piano by himself and that made him famous worldwide. So being blind is not a hindrance for him.

For others, life might not be fair but, as long as we have faith and trust that “God will never leave us or forsake us”. We can always achieve things we want to achieve as long as we have courage, willingness and perseverance. Patience is also one of the important values that we need to have in our character in achieving our goals. An impatient person and those who always feel discouraged will never achieve anything.

Like an athlete running in a race, he should always look forward and never turn his head back or look elsewhere. The right behaviour or right attitude is so important for a person having goals in his life. Being disabled does not have to be a hindrance in achieving on' a goal.

Society should also provide programs for the disabled to encourage them to achieve their goals and show their moral support for these people. Just remember for us to achieve something, we need to have the right attitude and perspective in life
